

FOOD DEMOCRACY

Agribusinesses vs. Small-scale farmers

Farmers and peasants have long fed their local and national communities, however Capitalism worked to consign them to the dustbin of history, replacing them with capital-intensive monoculture geared mainly to a global supermarket of elite and middle class consumers.

The creation of global production chains and global supermarkets, driven by profits, has been accompanied by greater hunger, worse food, and greater agricultural-related environmental destabilization all around than at any other time in history.

Global food supply chains are increasingly dominated by large multinational food companies, while trade is increasingly regulated through standards set by these private companies by national, regional and international authorities.

Furthermore, in order to compete with the international markets there is an emphasis on growing non traditional produce in the country.

Agribusinesses vs. Small-scale farmers

Cause

Unable to compete with corporations

Do not have the money to invest in technology

Neglected from international markets

Business is taken by bigger farms and companies

Become dependent on seeds and pesticides, cannot afford

Environmental degradation

Effect

Ongoing displacement

Marginalization

Repression

Persistent impoverishment

Increasing levels of hunger

Depopulation

Environmental devastation

Poverty

Lagging yields

Concept

The issue that I've chosen to interpret is Agribusinesses' vs. small-scale farmers. I've chosen this topic in order to explore the power relations between the two. It is evident through my research that Agribusinesses' dominate the peasant farmers even though their methods of producing food is considerably unsustainable as compared to the traditional approach that these small scale farmers use.

GOALS

Promote awareness

Be a critical reflection on current systems

Demonstrate power and control

Create personal connection

Stimulate discussion/dialogue

Concept

Dominance of Agribusiness' and large companies in the agricultural industry over small scale farmers.

Community cost 150,000 lives

150,000 farmers in India committed suicide due to bankruptcy from being pushed out of business by agribusinesses and large corporations.

The posters have the aesthetic of the Property Deed cards. However, rather than only focusing on the game costs, it highlights the effects on the farmers and local people as represented by the "community cost" which are case studies.
